SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

This case involves the application of the unit-determination rule first announced by the National Labor Relations Board ("Board") in Specialty Healthcare & Rehab. Ctr. of Mobile, 357 NLRB No. 83 (Aug. 26, 2011).<sup>2</sup> There, the Board announced a sweeping new rule that [W]hen employees or a labor organization petition for an election in a unit of employees who are readily identifiable as a group . . . and the Board finds that the employees in the group share a community of interest after considering the traditional criteria, the Board will find the petitioned-for unit to be an appropriate unit, despite a contention that employees in the unit could be placed in a larger unit which would also be appropriate or even more appropriate, unless the party so contending demonstrates that employees in the larger unit share an overwhelming community of interest with those in the petitioned-for unit.

Id. at *12-13 (emphasis added, footnote omitted).

Here, the Board's regional director relied upon and applied the Specialty Healthcare rule. Joint Appendix ("Joint App.") A-414-415. The regional director concluded that the maintenance employees at Nestle Dreyer's Ice Cream Company ("Dreyer's") manufacturing plant constituted an appropriate bargaining unit under the Specialty Healthcare rule because they were readily identifiable as a group, Joint App. A-415-417, which shared a community of interest among themselves. Joint App. A-17-420. The regional director rejected Dreyer's argument that production employees should also be included in the unit because Dreyer's failed to establish that those employees shared an "overwhelming community of interest" with the employees in the union's requested unit. Joint App. A-420-422. See also Dreyer's Opening Brief at 27, 30-33, 62-64. The Board declined to review the regional director's decision. Joint App.at A-426.

After a slender majority of the maintenance-employee unit voted in favor of union representation, Dreyer's refused to bargain with Respondent International Union of Operating Engineers Local 501, AFL-CIO ("Union") in order to challenge the regional director's unit determination. Id. at A-427. The Board issued a decision finding that Dreyer's refusal to bargain constituted an unfair labor practice. Id. at A-428-430. Dreyer's initial petition for review in this Court and the Board's initial cross-application for enforcement followed.

This Court held the initial case in abeyance pending the outcome of NLRB v. Noel Canning, 134 S. Ct. 2550 (2014). Following that decision, this Court vacated the Board's initial decision and remanded to the Board without reaching the merits. Joint App. at A-431 – A-436. The Board re-decided the case with a new three-member panel and reached the same result. Nestle-Dreyer's Grand Ice Cream, Inc., 361 NLRB No. 95 (Nov. 5, 2014). Dreyer's filed the instant petition for review on November 7, 2014, and on December 5, 2014, the Board again filed a cross-petition for enforcement.

The Court should grant Dreyer's petition and deny the Board's cross-petition for two reasons.

First, the Specialty Healthcare rule violates Section 9(b) of the National Labor Relations Act ("Act"), 29 U.S.C. § 159(b). Section 9(b) provides that the Board "shall decide in each case" whether the bargaining unit is appropriate in order to "assure to employees the fullest freedom in exercising the rights guaranteed by" the Act. That means the Board must take into account workplace realities, as it has historically, in order to ensure that the unit deemed appropriate will facilitate—not impede or make overly complex, and therefore undermine—collective bargaining in the workplace. The application of the Specialty Healthcare rule eliminates consideration of important, historically recognized factors in the unit-determination process. Additionally, Section 9(b)'s plain language requires the Board to assure employees the fullest freedom in exercising all of the rights guaranteed by the Act. But the Specialty Healthcare rule fails to give any weight to the statutory right of employees to refrain from collective activities. The Act does not permit the Board to pick and choose which rights to protect when making bargaining-unit determinations.

Second, the Specialty Healthcare rule violates Section 9(c)(5) of the Act, which provides that, in determining an appropriate bargaining unit, the “extent to which the employees have organized shall not be controlling.” 29 U.S.C. § 159(c)(5). As this Court explained in NLRB v. Lundy Packing Co., 68 F.3d 1577 (4th Cir. 1995), Section 9(c)(5) prohibits the Board from assigning the extent of organizing either exclusive or controlling weight. But that is exactly what the Specialty Healthcare rule does by ensuring, in the overwhelming majority of cases, that the unit deemed appropriate by the Board will be the unit which the union has requested based on the extent of its organizing.

ARGUMENT

I. THE BOARD’S SPECIALTY HEALTHCARE RULE VIOLATES SECTION 9(B) OF THE ACT

Section 9(b) of the Act requires the Board “in each case” to approve appropriate bargaining units that assure employees the “fullest freedom in exercising the rights guaranteed by” the Act. 29 U.S.C. § 159(b). The mandate that the Board must make a determination of the appropriate unit “in each case” is not an empty or careless use of that phrase. Instead, this language was carefully chosen to ensure that the units in which collective bargaining would take place would be ones in which effective collective bargaining could take place, taking into account the realities of the employer's business. The Board's abandonment of considering "in each case" all of the factors necessary to protect the "rights guaranteed by" the Act, does violence to the well-established meaning of Section 9(b), as established by decades of Board precedent, and is inconsistent with the legislative history surrounding the Act.

A. *Specialty Healthcare Is Inconsistent With The Well-Established Understanding Of Section 9(b)

For over half a century, the Board faithfully followed the statutory injunction under Section 9(b) of the Act to make its unit determinations "in each case." As the Supreme Court said, the words "shall decide in each case" in Section 9(b) mean that "whenever there is a disagreement about the appropriateness of a unit, the Board shall resolve the dispute. . . . Congress chose not to enact a general rule that would require plant unions, craft unions or industry-wide unions for every employer in every line of commerce, but also chose not to leave the decision up to employees or employers alone." Am. Hosp. Ass'n v. NLRB, 499 U.S. 606, 611 (1991). The resulting body of Board precedent under Section 9(b) established a careful balancing of competing interests of employees, employers, and unions, with a goal of approving units "in each case" that allowed individual employers to efficiently conduct their respective businesses while protecting the rights of employees to engage, or not to engage, in meaningful collective bargaining.

Historically, the Board weighed carefully the potential consequences of approving a bargaining unit that covered only a portion of a particular facility or workforce, whether it be a plant, warehouse, retail store, restaurant or other establishment. The Board was particularly mindful of the potential disruption that smaller multiple units could have on business operations, stable labor relations and effective, realistic collective bargaining.

The precedent in the manufacturing sector is typical of the care previously taken by the Board, reflected in a series of cases decided over many decades. In those cases, the Board was consistently clear that it would not make a unit determination without considering the realities of the particular business setting and how a given unit might affect the employer's operations, so that neither bargaining rights nor industrial peace and stability were undermined.

Hence, in Kalamazoo Paper Box Corp. the Board articulated its mission as follows:

As we view our obligation under the [Act], it is the mandate of Congress that this Board shall decide in each case . . . the unit appropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining. In performing this function, the Board must maintain the two-fold objective of insuring to employees their rights to self-organization and freedom of choice in collective bargaining and of fostering industrial peace and stability . . . . At the same time it creates the context within which the process of collective bargaining must function. Because the scope of the unit is basic to and permeates the whole of the collective-bargaining relationship, each unit determination . . . must have a direct relevancy to the circumstances within which the collective bargaining is to take place. For, if the unit determination fails to relate to the factual situation with which the parties must deal, efficient and stable collective bargaining is undermined rather than fostered.

136 NLRB 134, 137 (1962) (emphases added) (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). Applying these principles in Kalamazoo Paper Box, the Board rejected an attempt to sever truck drivers from an existing production and maintenance bargaining unit at a manufacturer. In doing so, it articulated the problem with relying only on job classifications as the basis for unit determinations, explaining:

In these circumstances, permitting severance of truck drivers as a separate unit based upon a traditional title . . . would result in creating a fictional mold within which the parties would be required to force their bargaining relationship. Such a determination could only create a state of chaos rather than foster stable collective bargaining, and could hardly be said to ‘assure to employees the fullest freedom in exercising the rights guaranteed by this Act’ as contemplated by Section 9(b).

Id. at 139-40 (emphasis added). The “chaos” the Board sought to avoid is not theoretical or speculative; rather, it represents the real, negative consequences that naturally flow from a proliferation of units that can carve up an employer’s workplace.

Accordingly, the Board has held that proper determination of the bargaining unit requires a functional approach, looking beyond the groupings of title, department and the like, to consider and evaluate how the requested bargaining unit might affect the operation of the employer's business. Thus, the Board has stressed that all community-of-interest factors must be viewed through the lens of the employer's business and whether both industrial stability and effective collective bargaining are functionally served by the unit deemed "appropriate."

For example, in International Paper Co., 96 NLRB 295 (1951), the Board refused to assign welders to a particular craft unit. In doing so, the Board explained: "We have always assumed it obvious that the manner in which a particular employer has organized his plant and utilizes the skills of his labor force has a direct bearing on the community of interest among various groups of employees in the plant and is thus an important consideration in any unit determination." Id. at 298 n.7.

The Board also has acknowledged that this principle must be applied in a variety of business settings, always taking into consideration the circumstances and context in which collective bargaining would take place:

The Board must hold fast to the objectives of the [Act] using an empirical approach to adjust its decisions to the evolving realities of industrial progress and the reflection of that change in organizations of employees. To be effective for that purpose, each unit determination must have a direct relevancy to the circumstances within which collective bargaining is to take place. While many factors may be common to most situations, in an evolving industrial complex the effect of any one factor, and therefore the weight to be given it in making the unit determination, will vary from industry to industry and from plant to plant. We are therefore convinced that collective-bargaining units must be based upon all the relevant evidence in each individual case.

American Cyanamid Co., 131 NLRB 909, 911 (1961) (emphasis added).

In the more than four decades since American Cyanamid, Kalamazoo Paper, and International Paper were decided, the Board has continued—until recently—to take care to avoid units that would undermine the functional integration of the employer’s manufacturing operations. See, e.g., Buckhorn, Inc., 343 NLRB 201, 203 (2004) (finding maintenance-only unit inappropriate because of employer’s “highly integrated” operations)<sup>3</sup>; Avon Products, Inc., 250 NLRB 1479, 1482 (1979) (reversing regional director’s decision that failed to account for employer’s “highly integrated process”).

But the Board, in Specialty Healthcare (and again here), abandoned this well-developed and long-standing body of precedent. Inexplicably and without warrant, the Specialty Healthcare rule eliminates consideration “in each case” of <sup>3</sup> This case, like Buckhorn, involves an employer with highly integrated operations such that historically a maintenance-only unit would be inappropriate. See Dreyer’s Brief at 19-27. The regional director purported to distinguish Buckhorn and the Board’s long line of decisions that preceded it on the grounds that Dreyer’s operations were not sufficiently integrated to satisfy the new “overwhelming community of interest” barrier. Joint App. A-420-421. Thus, the instant case serves as a vivid example that, by erecting this new barrier, the Specialty Healthcare rule has effectively altered decades of well-settled Board precedent and permits the Board to ignore the functional integration of the employer’s operations, all in derogation of the requirements of Section 9(b).

the “circumstances within which collective bargaining is to take place.” Instead, under Specialty Healthcare the Board has adopted an “employees readily identifiable as a group” framework that slavishly pays heed to job titles, departments, or classifications without regard to how bargaining in such a unit would occur in the context of the daily practicalities of operating the business.

The Specialty Healthcare rule thus permits multiple smaller bargaining units drawn along discrete groupings such as job title, department or similar lines, instead of larger units reflecting the reality of the employer’s functional integration and the resulting community of interests shared by its employees. The employer’s bargaining obligations thus may be diffused among different bargaining units that bear little or no relation to the way in which the employer’s business actually operates and functions.

Such smaller, multiple units disrupt both the efficient operation of the business and effective collective bargaining. More time must be spent bargaining contracts and more resources deployed to keep the artificially separated groups of employees functioning efficiently. An employer’s operations, once divided into units that bear little or no relationship to the functional integration of the entire business location, will tend to evolve in different directions as each individual unit’s terms and conditions of employment devolve through separate bargaining, spurred on by employee and union rivalry to outpace the other groups at the bargaining table. Employer flexibility and employee advancement lose out as separate bargaining units isolate employees in different seniority systems and job classifications, and the opportunities to move to other jobs within the employer are blocked by separate bidding systems and seniority rights, thus impeding not only employee advancement but employer business flexibility.

These negative consequences also cause the odd result of empowering a union based on which portion of the employer's business it happens to represent, while disenfranchising employees in other parts of the operation. Normally dependent on the solidarity of its membership, the strength of the union under Specialty Healthcare will now largely depend on whether it controls a unit consisting of "employees [] identifiable as a group" in the portion most crucial to the operation of the employer's business. If, for example, a smaller yet operationally crucial bargaining unit calls for a boycott or work stoppage, the employer may find itself at the mercy of a fraction of its overall complement of employees. Of equal importance, many if not most employees will not have any say in the matter even though it could result in a work stoppage by default for them.

This is no small matter. In addition to the manufacturing facility involved in the instant case, virtually every type of industry subject to the Board's jurisdiction is affected by the Specialty Healthcare rule.<sup>4</sup>

B. Specialty Healthcare Is Inconsistent With The Contemporaneous Legislative Record Of The Act

The legislative history of Section 9(b) reinforces that the Board must make unit determinations based on all the circumstances before it. Section 9(b) is based on Section 2(4) of the Railway Labor Act of 1934 ("RLA"), which provides that employees "shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. The majority of any craft or class of employees shall have a right to determine who shall be the representative of the craft or class for the purpose of this act." Comparison of S. 2926 and S. 1958, at 30

(Comm. Print 1935), reprinted in 1 NLRB, Legislative History of the National Labor Relations Act of 1935, at 1355 (1949) (“1935 Legislative History”).

This RLA provision is different from what became Section 9(b) of the Act in a critical respect: the RLA does not contain language mandating a decision by the National Mediation Board (“NMB”) as to the appropriate unit “in each case.” Congress explained this fundamental difference in its comparison of Senate Bill 2926 (the original Senate bill proposing the Act) to Senate Bill 1958 (what ultimately was enacted as the Act): “The same necessity for unit determinations is embraced in the definition of majority rule in the [RLA] as set out above, although in that industry the nature of the department or craft alinement [sic] is so clearly defined as to require no express elaboration.” Id., reprinted in 1935 Legislative History 1356.

By comparison, Congress recognized that the virtually limitless range of employers and areas of commerce that fall under the jurisdiction of the Act are broader than, and different from, the railroad (and now airline) industry covered under the RLA. Unlike the RLA, the Act covers multiple types of businesses, employing individuals with many different and varied skill sets, in enterprises ranging in size from but a few employees to hundreds of thousands of employees, doing business in but a single location to having hundreds or thousands of locations around the country (and the world), all following multiple lines of ownership, organization and business purpose. By requiring unit determinations “in each case” under Section 9(b), Congress recognized that the Act must be applied to allow for effective collective bargaining in each type of business, business setting and functional organization.

Although Congress recognized that a “one size fits all” approach to bargaining-unit determination might be acceptable in the more homogeneous business types covered by the RLA, that approach would be neither possible nor desirable for the employers and employees in the broad range of industries subject to the Act. Therefore, the Board was directed to make its determinations not on the basis of a simplistic formula, but to consider the factors making up an appropriate unit “in each case.”

The important role of the Board in making a decision “in each case” under Section 9(b) was part of a larger debate over the wisdom of majority elections. This “majority rule” debate naturally led to a discussion of why the Board needed to decide in what unit the majority would be determined:

The major problem connected with the majority rule is not the rule itself, but its application. The important question is to what unit the majority rule applies. . . . Section 9(b) of the Wagner bill provides that the Board shall decide the unit appropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining. . . . The necessity for the Board deciding the unit and the difficulties sometimes involved can readily be made clear where the employer runs two factories producing similar products: Shall a unit be each factory or shall they be combined into one? Where there are several crafts in the plant, shall each be separately represented? To lodge the power of determining this question with the employer would invite unlimited abuse and gerrymandering the units would defeat the aims of the statute. If the employees themselves could make the decision without proper consideration of the elements which should constitute the appropriate units they could in any given instance defeat the practical significance of the majority rule; and, by breaking off into small groups, could make it impossible for the employer to run his plant.

Hearings on S. 1958 Before the S. Comm. On Educ. & Lab., 74th Cong. 82 (1935)

(statement of Francis Biddle, then-Chairman of the precursor to the Board), reprinted in 1935 Legislative History 1458 (emphases added).

By deferring to the union's requested unit and erecting a barrier so that alternative units proposed by employers are almost never seriously considered, the Specialty Healthcare rule effectively eliminates the Board's responsibility to determine the proper unit "in each case." The practical effect is to exclude the employer from the process, and to largely eliminate the Board's role in carefully balancing the various competing interests of employees, employers, and unions. This single-minded focus by the Board on the union's proposed unit is contrary to the intent of Congress, and implicates the same concerns originally raised by then-Chairman Biddle.

C. The Board Ignored Section 9(b)'s Command To Assure Employees The Fullest Freedom In Exercising All Of The Rights Guaranteed By The Act

In developing the Specialty Healthcare rule the Board failed to fulfill its statutory obligation to consider the right to refrain from collective bargaining. In

Specialty Healthcare, the Board stated that the “right to self-organization” is the “first and central right set forth in Section 7 of the Act.” Specialty Healthcare, 357 NLRB No. 83, at *12 (emphasis added). The Specialty Healthcare rule thus rests on the Board’s view that the “right to self-organization” is superior to the other rights guaranteed by Section 7. This holding is contrary to the language of Section 9(b) and the congressional command establishing a facially neutral unit-determination standard.

When Congress amended the Act in 1947, one of the key changes was the addition of a “right to refrain” from union activities to Section 7 of the Act, 29 U.S.C. § 157, to ensure that employees could exercise free choice on the important question of union representation. See Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947 (Taft-Hartley Act), ch. 120, sec. 101, § 7, 61 Stat. 136, 140.

This addition was considered so important that Congress also amended Section 9(b) of the Act to assure that in making unit determinations, the Board took into account not just the right to organize for collective bargaining, but all of the rights guaranteed under the Act, including the right to refrain. In its original form, Section 9(b) required the Board to “decide in each case whether, in order to insure to employees the full benefit of their right to self-organization and collective bargaining, and otherwise to effectuate the policies of this Act, the unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining shall be the employer unit, craft unit, plant unit, or subdivision thereof.” National Labor Relations Act (Wagner Act), ch. 372, § 9(b), 49 Stat. 449, 453 (1935) (emphasis added).

In 1947, Congress deleted Section 9(b)’s “right to self-organization and collective bargaining” language and replaced it with the Act’s current language, which reads, in relevant part: “The Board shall decide in each case whether, in order to assure to employees the fullest freedom in exercising the rights guaranteed by this Act . . ..” 61 Stat. at 143, 29 U.S.C. § 159(b) (emphasis added). Congress thereby changed what had been a pro-unionization unit-determination standard and replaced it with a neutral standard requiring the Board to respect all of the rights guaranteed to employees under the Act, including the right to refrain from collective bargaining.

Accordingly, Congress’s modification of the Act in 1947 “emphasized that one of the principal purposes of the [Act] is to give employees full freedom to choose or not to choose representatives for collective bargaining.” H.R. Rep. No. 80-510, at 47 (1947) (Conf. Rep.), reprinted in 1 NLRB, Legislative History of the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, at 551 (1948) (emphasis added). Congress guaranteed “in express terms the right of employees to refrain from collective bargaining or concerted activities if they choose to do so,” intending that it “result in a substantially larger measure of protection of those rights when bargaining units are being established than has heretofore been the practice.” Id.

Congress enshrined the right to refrain from collective activity in the Act itself so that it would be recognized and protected by the Board, including in the unit-determination process. By enabling unions to organize smaller bargaining units (without regard to functional business purpose), Specialty Healthcare makes it easier for the union to obtain the votes of a majority of targeted employees whom it has already organized.<sup>5</sup> In such a gerrymandered unit, the union does not have to convince the employees in a broader, more appropriate unit who might be opposed to unionization; and any dissenting views from employees in the smaller unit are marginalized because they are outnumbered. The Board's new approach thus relegates those employees to an artificial minority position—although in fact they might be in the majority of all employees in an appropriate bargaining unit—leaving them with virtually no ability to exercise their rights to refrain from collective bargaining.

<sup>5</sup> As dissenting Board Member Hayes stated in Specialty Healthcare, the rule will not only “encourage union organizing in units as small as possible” but also “enlists the Board’s Regional Offices, who will have little option but to find almost any petitioned-for unit appropriate, in a campaign to support union organization where the recent independent efforts of unions to persuade employees to join or remain with them in large numbers have failed.” 357 NLRB No. 83, at *20. Such an outcome, in addition to conflicting with Section 9(b), could result in the disenfranchisement of large numbers of employees whose voices and votes might otherwise have mattered.

II. THE SPECIALTY HEALTHCARE RULE VIOLATES SECTION 9(C)(5) OF THE ACT

The Specialty Healthcare rule requires a bargaining unit to meet two criteria. First, it must be composed of “employees who are readily identifiable as a group.” 357 NLRB No. 83, at *12. Second, it must be established that the employees in the group share a community of interest with one another. Id. at 12-13. Once these two criteria are met, a challenging employer (or rival union) can only expand the requested unit if it can show that employees excluded from the petitioned-for unit share an “overwhelming community of interest” with the employees in the proposed unit. Id. at 13.

This is inconsistent with Section 9(c)(5) of the Act, which provides that, in determining an appropriate bargaining unit, the “extent to which the employees have organized shall not be controlling.” 29 U.S.C. § 159(c)(5) (emphasis added). This Court has explained that Section 9(c)(5)’s prohibition “does not merely preclude the Board from relying ‘only’ on the extent of organization. The statutory language is more restrictive, prohibiting the Board from assigning this factor either exclusive or ‘controlling’ weight.” Lundy Packing, 68 F.3d at 1580. Thus, Section 9(c)(5), as interpreted by this Court, specifically rejects what Specialty Healthcare establishes as a rule: a bargaining unit that—protected from change by the “overwhelming community of interest” standard—will be the exact one requested by the petitioning union on the basis of the union's extent of organizing. See Lundy Packing, 68 F.3d at 1581.

In Lundy Packing, the union requested a unit that excluded certain quality-control, laboratory, industrial-engineering, and other employees. Id. at 1579. The Board's regional director presumed that the petitioned-for unit was appropriate, and on review the Board agreed that the excluded employees did not share an "overwhelming community of interest" with the employees included in the unit. Id. at 1581. This Court disagreed and vacated the Board's decision, holding that the Board violated Section 9(c)(5) because it had given "controlling weight" to the extent of union organization within the employer's facility. Id. Rejecting the Board's standard, this Court explained: "By presuming the union-proposed unit proper unless there is an overwhelming community of interest with excluded employees, the Board effectively accorded controlling weight to the extent of union organization. This is because the union will propose the unit it has organized." Id. at 1581 (emphasis added) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).<sup>6</sup> This Court further observed that under these circumstances, the Board's ruling made it “impossible to escape the conclusion that the . . . [quality-control and industrial-engineering employees] were excluded [by the Board] ‘in large part because the Petitioners do not seek to represent them.’” Id. (quoting underlying Board decision). Thus, the Board’s ruling bore “the indicia of a classic 9(c)(5) violation.” Id.

The Specialty Healthcare rule effectively downplays the importance of the community-of-interest test and instead gives virtually controlling weight to the union’s organization efforts in a way that is even more transparent than in Lundy Packing.

First, in Lundy Packing, this Court observed that the Board had “generally avoided § 9(c)(5) violations” by applying community-of-interest factors “sufficiently independent of the extent of union organization.” 68 F.3d at 1580. By contrast, the Specialty Healthcare rule destroys the “independent” community-of-interest analysis by limiting its application only to the group of employees identified by the union, and declining to apply it to a group of employees identified by the employer (or rival union). Thus, under Specialty Healthcare, the community-of-interest factors are no longer applied “independent of the extent of union organization.” Id.

Second, it is axiomatic that no unit in which members do not share a community of interest could be appropriate. Thus, it is clear that what really differentiates the Board’s analysis of the appropriate unit under Specialty Healthcare is not the community-of-interest test, but whether the employees petitioned for by the union are ‘identifiable as a group.’ In reality, as this Court has recognized, petitioned-for units approved under the Specialty Healthcare rule will be those proposed by the union based on the extent of union organization. Lundy Packing, 68 F.3d at 1581 (explaining that the “union will propose the unit it has organized”(citation omitted)). The Board’s use of the term ‘employees identifiable as a group’ is therefore little more than a proxy for a “unit proposed on the basis of union organization.”<sup>7</sup>

<sup>7</sup> The Board argues that its new standard is not a proxy for union organization. To be sure, the Board has on occasion rejected units proposed simply on the basis of union organizing. But it has only done so in the most egregious situations where the employees in the proposed unit lack any community of interest or the proposed unit has no rational basis. See, e.g., The Neiman Marcus Group, 361 NLRB No. 11 (July 28, 2014) (requested unit did not share a community of interest because of the “lack of any relationship between the . . . proposed unit and any of the administrative or operational lines drawn by the Employer . . . combined with the complete absence of any related factors that could have mitigated or offset that deficit.”). Id. at *5 (emphasis added); see also, Odwalla, Inc., 357 NLRB No. 132 (Dec. 9, 2011) (employer carried its burden of

Finally, under Specialty Healthcare even where the Board does consider the employer's proposed unit, the union's requested unit is elevated to (practically) controlling status and a different (typically larger) unit will be adopted only if an employer or rival union can establish that the excluded employees share an overwhelming community of interest. As in Lundy Packing, the petitioned-for unit is thus insulated from alteration in all but the rarest of cases, with the result being that the extent of organizing is effectively given controlling weight.

In sum, the Specialty Healthcare rule begins with a presumption that the petitioned-for unit—one based on the extent of union organizing—is appropriate simply because the members of the unit share a community of interest among themselves. It then effectively insulates that unit from challenge by erecting the “overwhelming community of interest” barrier.

The Board attempted to justify this new barrier by relying on Blue Man Vegas, LLC v. NLRB, 529 F.3d 417 (D.C. Cir. 2008), but that reliance is misplaced. First, Blue Man is not binding on this Court. And, indeed, the rationale of that proving an overwhelming community of interest only because the union's proposed unit had “no rational basis”). Id. at *7, n. 38. These outlier cases do not detract from the usual result under Specialty Healthcare that the Board, applying the “overwhelming community of interest” barrier, simply approves the union's requested unit. Indeed, implicit from the Board's holding in The Neiman Marcus Group case is its understanding that a sufficient community of interest may be found irrespective of whether or how the proposed unit fits in with the employer's operations. These cases, then, provide no general comfort to employers.

decision has already been foreclosed by this Court's opinion in Lundy Packing. Lundy Packing rejected the "overwhelming community of interest" test which the Blue Man court incorrectly endorsed precisely because that test "effectively accorded controlling weight to the extent of union organization" in violation of section 9(c)(5) of the Act. 68 F.3d at 1581. This Court should follow Lundy Packing and reject the Board's Specialty Healthcare rule.

Second, in affirming the Board the court in Blue Man applied a standard developed by the Board for a very different type of case. The Blue Man court stated that Board unit determinations are to be affirmed so long as the unit is not "clearly" or "truly" inappropriate. 529 F.3d at 421. That heightened burden of proof applies only to situations in which an employer (or rival union) seeks to have the Board reject a presumptively appropriate or historically recognized unit.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>8</sup> Presumptively appropriate units are those which, over time, the Board has found are presumptively appropriate for certain types of businesses or industries. See e.g., RTW Indus., Inc., 296 NLRB 910, 912 (1989) ("It is well settled that a single plant unit of production and maintenance employees is presumptively an appropriate unit for bargaining."). Historically recognized units are also typically given a presumption of appropriateness by the Board and the parties seeking to overturn them bear "a heavy evidentiary burden." See, e.g. Cadillac Asphalt Paving Co., 349 NLRB No. 6, 9 (2007) ("The Board places a heavy evidentiary burden on a party attempting to show that historical units are no longer appropriate. Indeed, 'compelling circumstances are required to overcome the significance of bargaining history.'" (citation omitted)). Ironically, it is Dreyer's which here advocates in favor of both a presumptively appropriate unit as well as

The Board's Specialty Healthcare rule, however, purports to take this heightened test for the determining presumptively appropriate or historically recognized units and extended it to the initial determination of units in all cases, thereby creating in every such case an "overwhelming community of interest" barrier in violation of Section 9(c)(5).

In a dissent that relied heavily on this Court's decision in Lundy, Board Member Hayes stated:

The majority concludes that its approach comports with Section 9(b)'s statement that the Board shall ensure employees the fullest freedom in exercising their rights, stressing that among these rights is the right to self-organize. However, as the Lundy court made clear, Board effectuation of this right may not go so far as to give controlling weight to extent of organization, in contravention of Section 9(c)(5).

Specialty Healthcare, 357 NLRB No. 83, at *19. Member Hayes recognized that the Specialty Healthcare rule "obviously encourages unions to engage in incremental organizing in the smallest units possible" and "make[s] it virtually impossible for an employer to oppose the organizing effort either by campaign persuasion or through Board litigation." Id.

one which had been historically sought by the union and found appropriate by the Board in previous organizing efforts at the same plant. See Dreyer's brief at 16-17.

As this case demonstrates, Member Hayes was clearly correct. Accordingly, this Court—as it did in Lundy—should vacate the Board’s order and should hold that the Specialty Healthcare rule is invalid because it is contrary to the Act.

CONCLUSION

The Court should grant Dreyer's petition for review and deny the Board's cross-petition for enforcement.

§ 158. Unfair labor practices

(a) Unfair labor practices by employer

It shall be an unfair labor practice for an employer—

(1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in section 157 of this title;

(2) to dominate or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization or contribute financial or other support to it: Provided, That subject to rules and regulations made and published by the Board pursuant to section 156 of this title, an employer shall not be prohibited from permitting employees to confer with him during working hours without loss of time or pay;

(3) by discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization: Provided, That nothing in this subchapter, or in any other statute of the United States, shall preclude an employer from making an agreement with a labor organization (not established, maintained, or assisted by any action defined in this subsection as an unfair labor practice) to require as a condition of employment membership therein on or after the thirtieth day following the beginning of such employment or the effective date of such agreement, whichever is the later, (i) if such labor organization is the representative of the employees as provided in section 159(a) of this title, in the appropriate collective-bargaining unit covered by such agreement when made, and (ii) unless following an election held as provided in section 159(e) of this title within one year preceding the effective date of such agreement, the Board shall have certified that at least a majority of the employees eligible to vote in such election have voted to rescind the authority of such labor organization to make such an agreement: Provided further, That no employer shall justify any discrimination against an employee for nonmembership in a labor organization (A) if he has reasonable grounds for believing that such membership was not available to the employee on the same terms and conditions generally applicable to other members, or (B) if he has reasonable grounds for believing that membership was denied or terminated for reasons other than the failure of the employee to tender the periodic dues and the initiation fees uniformly required as a condition of acquiring or retaining membership;

(4) to discharge or otherwise discriminate against an employee because he has filed charges or given testimony under this subchapter;

(5) to refuse to bargain collectively with the representatives of his employees, subject to the provisions of section 159(a) of this title.

(b) Unfair labor practices by labor organization

It shall be an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents—

(1) to restrain or coerce (A) employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in section 157 of this title: Provided, That this paragraph shall not impair the right of a labor organization to prescribe its own rules with respect to the acquisition or retention of membership therein; or (B) an employer in the selection of his representatives for the purposes of collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances;

(2) to cause or attempt to cause an employer to discriminate against an employee in violation of subsection (a)(3) of this section or to discriminate against an employee with respect to whom membership in such organization has been denied or terminated on some ground other than his failure to tender the periodic dues and the initiation fees uniformly required as a condition of acquiring or retaining membership;

(3) to refuse to bargain collectively with an employer, provided it is the representative of tice any act which was performed prior to the date of the enactment of this act [June 23, 1947] which did not constitute an unfair labor practice prior thereto, and the provisions of section 8(a)(3) and section 8(b)(2) of the National Labor Relations Act as amended by this title [subsecs. (a)(3) and (b)(2) of this section] shall not make an unfair labor practice the performance of any obligation under a collective-bargaining agreement entered into prior to the date of the enactment of this Act [June 23, 1947], or (in the case of an agreement for a period of not more than one year) entered into on or after such date of enactment, but prior to the effective date of this title, if the performance of such obligation would not have constituted an unfair labor practice under section 8(3) [see subsec. (a)(3) of this section] of the National Labor Relations Act prior to the effective date of this title [sixty days after June 23, 1947] unless such agreement was renewed or extended subsequent thereto.”

§ 158a. Providing facilities for operations of Federal Credit Unions

Provision by an employer of facilities for the operations of a Federal Credit Union on the premises of such employer shall not be deemed to be intimidation, coercion, interference, restraint or discrimination within the provisions of sections 157 and 158 of this title, or acts amendatory thereof.

(Dec. 6, 1937, ch. 3, § 5, 51 Stat. 5.)

CODIFICATION

This section was not enacted either as part of the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, which comprises this chapter, or as part of the National Labor Relations Act, which comprises this subchapter.

§ 159. Representatives and elections

(a) Exclusive representatives; employees' adjustment of grievances directly with employer

Representatives designated or selected for the purposes of collective bargaining by the majority of the employees in a unit appropriate for such purposes, shall be the exclusive representatives of all the employees in such unit for the purposes of collective bargaining in respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, or other conditions of employment: Provided, That any individual employee or a group of employees shall have the right at any time to present grievances to their employer and to have such grievances adjusted, without the intervention of the bargaining representative, as long as the adjustment is not inconsistent with the terms of a collective-bargaining contract or agreement then in effect: Provided further, That the bargaining representative has been given opportunity to be present at such adjustment.

(b) Determination of bargaining unit by Board

The Board shall decide in each case whether, in order to assure to employees the fullest freedom in exercising the rights guaranteed by this subchapter, the unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining shall be the employer unit, craft unit, plant unit, or subdivision thereof: Provided, That the Board shall not (1) decide that any unit is appropriate for such purposes if such unit includes both professional employees and employees who are not professional employees unless a majority of such professional employees vote for inclusion in such unit; or (2) decide that any craft unit is inappropriate for such purposes on the ground that a different unit has been established by a prior Board determination, unless a majority of the employees in the proposed craft unit vote against separate representation or (3) decide that any unit is appropriate for such purposes if it includes, together with other employees, any individual employed as a guard to enforce against employees and other persons rules to protect property of the employer or to protect the safety of persons on the employer's premises; but no labor organization shall be certified as the representative of employees in a bargaining unit of guards if such organization admits to membership, or is affiliated directly or indirectly with an organization which admits to membership, employees other than guards.

(c) Hearings on questions affecting commerce; rules and regulations

(1) Whenever a petition shall have been filed, in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Board—

(A) by an employee or group of employees or any individual or labor organization acting in their behalf alleging that a substantial number of employees (i) wish to be represented for collective bargaining and that their employer declines to recognize their representative as the representative defined in subsection (a) of this section, or (ii) assert that the individual or labor organization, which has been certified or is being currently recognized by their employer as the bargaining representative, is no longer a representative as defined in subsection (a) of this section; or

(B) by an employer, alleging that one or more individuals or labor organizations have presented to him a claim to be recognized as the representative defined in subsection (a) of this section;

the Board shall investigate such petition and if it has reasonable cause to believe that a question of representation affecting commerce exists shall provide for an appropriate hearing upon due notice. Such hearing may be conducted by an officer or employee of the regional office, who shall not make any recommendations with respect thereto. If the Board finds upon the record of such hearing that such a question of representation exists, it shall direct an election by secret ballot and shall certify the results thereof.

(2) In determining whether or not a question of representation affecting commerce exists, the same regulations and rules of decision shall apply irrespective of the identity of the persons filing the petition or the kind of relief sought and in no case shall the Board deny a labor organization a place on the ballot by reason of an order with respect to such labor organization or its predecessor not issued in conformity with section 160(c) of this title.

(3) No election shall be directed in any bargaining unit or any subdivision within which in the preceding twelve-month period, a valid election shall have been held. Employees engaged in an economic strike who are not entitled to reinstatement shall be eligible to vote under such regulations as the Board shall find are consistent with the purposes and provisions of this subchapter in any election conducted within twelve months after the commencement of the strike. In any election where none of the choices on the ballot receives a majority, a run-off shall be conducted, the ballot providing for a selection between the two choices receiving the largest and second largest number of valid votes cast in the election.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the waiving of hearings by stipulation for the purpose of a consent election in conformity with regulations and rules of decision of the Board.

(5) In determining whether a unit is appropriate for the purposes specified in subsection (b) of this section the extent to which the employees have organized shall not be controlling.

(d) Petition for enforcement or review; transcript

Whenever an order of the Board made pursuant to section 160(c) of this title is based in whole or in part upon facts certified following an investigation pursuant to subsection (c) of this section and there is a petition for the enforcement or review of such order, such certification and the record of such investigation shall be included in the transcript of the entire record required to be filed under subsection (e) or (f) of section 160 of this title, and thereupon the decree of the court enforcing, modifying, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Board shall be made and entered upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript.

(e) Secret ballot; limitation of elections

(1) Upon the filing with the Board, by 30 per centum or more of the employees in a bargaining unit covered by an agreement between their employer and a labor organization made pursuant to section 158(a)(3) of this title, of a petition alleging they desire that such authority be rescinded, the Board shall take a secret ballot of the employees in such unit and certify the results thereof to such labor organization and to the employer.

(2) No election shall be conducted pursuant to this subsection in any bargaining unit or any subdivision within which, in the preceding twelve-month period, a valid election shall have been held.

(July 5, 1935, ch. 372, §9, 49 Stat. 453; June 23, 1947, ch. 120, title I, §101, 61 Stat. 143; Oct. 22, 1951, ch. 534, §1(c), (d), 65 Stat. 601; Pub. L. 86-257, title II, §201(d), title VII, §702, Sept. 14, 1959, 73 Stat. 525, 542.)

Subsecs. (f), (g). Pub. L. 86-257, §201(d), repealed subsecs. (f) and (g) which required unions to file their constitutions, bylaws and a report, prescribed the contents of the report and directed the filing of annual financial reports, and are now covered by section 431 of this title.

FINDINGS AND POLICY

SECTION 1. The denial by employers of the right of employees to organize and the refusal by employers to accept the procedure of collective bargaining lead to strikes and other forms of industrial strife or unrest, which have the intent or the necessary effect of burdening or obstructing commerce by (a) impairing the efficiency, safety, or operation of the instrumentalities of commerce; (b) occurring in the current of commerce; (c) materially affecting, restraining, or controlling the flow of raw materials or manufactured or processed goods from or into the channels of commerce, or the prices of such materials or goods in commerce; or (d) causing diminution of employment and wages in such volume as substantially to impair or disrupt the market for goods flowing from or into the channels of commerce.

National Labor Relations Act.
Findings and policy.

The inequality of bargaining power between employees who do not possess full freedom of association or actual liberty of contract, and employers who are organized in the corporate or other forms of ownership association substantially burdens and affects the flow of commerce, and tends to aggravate recurrent business depressions, by depressing wage rates and the purchasing power of wage earners in industry and by preventing the stabilization of competitive wage rates and working conditions within and between industries.

Experience has proved that protection by law of the right of employees to organize and bargain collectively safeguards commerce from injury, impairment, or interruption, and promotes the flow of commerce by removing certain recognized sources of industrial strife and unrest, by encouraging practices fundamental to the friendly adjustment of industrial disputes arising out of differences as to wages, hours, or other working conditions, and by restoring equality of bargaining power between employers and employees.

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to eliminate the causes of certain substantial obstructions to the free flow of commerce and to mitigate and eliminate these obstructions when they have occurred by encouraging the practice and procedure of collective bargaining and by protecting the exercise by workers

SHORT TITLE AND DECLARATION OF POLICY

SECTION 1. (a) This Act may be cited as the "Labor Management Relations Act, 1947".

(b) Industrial strife which interferes with the normal flow of commerce and with the full production of articles and commodities for commerce, can be avoided or substantially minimized if employers, employees, and labor organizations each recognize under law one another's legitimate rights in their relations with each other, and above all recognize under law that neither party has any right in its relations with any other to engage in acts or practices which jeopardize the public health, safety, or interest.

It is the purpose and policy of this Act, in order to promote the full flow of commerce, to prescribe the legitimate rights of both employees and employers in their relations affecting commerce, to provide orderly and peaceful procedures for preventing the interference by either with the legitimate rights of the other, to protect the rights of individual employees in their relations with labor organizations whose activities affect commerce, to define and proscribe practices on the part of labor and management which affect commerce and are inimical to the general welfare, and to protect the rights of the public in connection with labor disputes affecting commerce.
